

WALL STREET JOURNAL

DEALS & DEAL MAKERS

newsletter's "euro prices are down by 30%!"

Presumably, when the dollar rallies again, Mr. Weinberg will remind his European clients how much more expensive a subscription has become. Just to avoid any perceived conflicts of interest.

Buffett Rocks?

They won't be doing cartwheels to "Won't Get Fooled Again," but some very well-known names on Wall Street are picking up the guitar.

Berkshire Hathaway's Warren Buffett, bond-market king Bill Gross of Pimco and famous mutual-fund managers Peter Lynch and Mario Gabelli are among those who have banded together—not to form the next Who—but rather to sign a white Fender Stratocaster that has crisscrossed the U.S.

Warren Buffett

to receive their signatures.

The guitar, now housed in a vault at a FleetBoston Financial branch in Manhattan, will soon be auctioned off by hedge-fund manager Todd Harrison on behalf of his Ruby Peck Foundation for Children's Education, a charity.

The signers aren't without their own musical merits, with Mr. Buffett a ukulele man known for serenading guests at functions and Mr. Gabelli an accordion player who once performed at Carnegie Hall.

Calling All Cads

No shortage of material here.

A New York publishing house is looking for contributors to the Encyclopedia of White-Collar & Corporate Crime, a coming tome.

The two-volume set will include 500 articles and will be edited by a professor from Arkansas State University.

Look around the office and talk to your colleagues: Submissions are due by Aug. 15.

—Compiled by Kyle Pope, with contributions from Craig Karmin and Karen Talley.
